

My dream is to become a financially independent woman who challenges the traditional stereotypes about what women can and cannot do. I want to show that women can be strong, confident and capable of making their own decisions. Being bold is important to me—I want to stand up for myself and others, breaking down barriers that limit women in society as well as family too.

I'm working towards a career that not only provides financial stability but also allows me to lead and make a difference. I want a job, which is a role that empowers me and others, proving that women can succeed in any field they choose. For me, being independent means having the freedom to live on my terms, create my own path and inspire others to do the same. It's about making bold choices and challenging the expectations that society has set for women.
